We talk about professional and beginner modes in Chapter 1. Layered Illustrations Photoshop offers the ability to create multilayered images. Images are layered, or stacked, one atop the other. The number of layers is limited by Photoshop's operating system and may be as few as three layers or as many as 20. Each layer has its own purpose. In addition to this, layers that represent colors and gradients can be edited separately, or the colors and gradients can be edited at the same time. A basic workflow to understand in creating artworks involves the following steps: 1. Create the artwork in its full form. 2. Make any necessary changes to the artwork. 3. Save it as a Photoshop PSD file. 4. Duplicate the artwork and place it in another location on your computer. This duplicated image is a ready-to-work-with layer. 5. Open that layer in Photoshop and make your changes. Save the changes as a Photoshop PSD file. 6. Repeat the process until you are finished. Save and close. Here are the steps in creating multilayered images: 1. Open the document. 2. Create a new layer by clicking the New Layer button in the Layers palette, as shown in Figure 2-1. Alternatively, you can click the New Layer icon in the Layers palette. 3. Load the image by clicking the Eye icon next to the Photoshop logo on the Layers palette, then double-click the image in the open area. This step loads the image so that it is available to use for the purpose of this exercise. 4. Draw or paint on the new layer until the image is the desired size and shape. This process depends on the image you are working on, so you may be able to draw it out by hand or use different tools, such as a ruler to measure the image, or a pen tool to draw freehand. 5. After you are satisfied with the image's color scheme, choose Image⇒Adjustments⇒Levels. The Levels dialog box appears. 6. Click the thumbnail for the Radial Filter, and you see the dialog box shown in Figure 2-2. 7. Pick a Filter and click OK. Figure 2-1: The Layers palette enables you to create, edit

, and an intelligent one. There's nothing to it. A few simple pages, and a lot of good kids. That's all anyone needs. Follow the links below to read more about the stories behind the people on this page: John Fraley I'm an author and a teacher, and I live in Charlottesville, Virginia. I began volunteering for Pheasant Ridge School when I was a teenager, right after my junior year of high school, and I loved it immediately. I'd done a lot of traveling as a preteen, and my experience at Pheasant Ridge reminded me of my school trips to Hawaii and Japan. I'd been to many schools, from the best to the not-so-best, but Pheasant Ridge felt like home to me. At Pheasant Ridge, I was able to join the drama and literary clubs, and I could share my love for books and storytelling with students who appreciated that kind of thing. The school was filled with open-minded kids, and I felt at home. In my third year of volunteering at Pheasant Ridge, I wrote the role-playing game The Adventure of the Potluck. We ended up in the 1988 National Scholastic Championship's 3rd place award for Best Game, and we won the 1988 Virginia Governor's Award for Scholastic Excellence. After that, I'd also won the 1989 Pheasant Ridge School Magazine's Editor of the Year Award. I was thrilled about it. As I worked on the Potluck game, I fell in love with games, and also the possibilities of writing. I learned how to write lines of text that other people could read, and I learned a lot of new things. When I eventually graduated from high school, I knew I wanted to study English, and I decided to apply to graduate school. During the first semester of my freshman year at the University of Virginia, I wrote a game called The Wall. This was my first original game experience, and I had a great time writing it. The Wall was also the game we played at our first role-playing game convention, and we met a lot of great people who had also been to school at Pheasant Ridge, and it was a good way to share my game with other people. The folks who had been to Pheasant Ridge were the same

The government has already promulgated an ordinance that will make hospitals the only viable option for treating jaundice in newborns, Nadig said. "We are already raising voices against the practice of hospitalising the babies," he said. An expert committee appointed by the Union government had recently suggested that newborns with high and increasing bilirubin levels should be kept under observation in a hospital setting and a decision on further management should be taken after five to seven days. "The committee has also asked that the management of newborns with jaundice should not be confused with the management of other newborn disorders like convulsions, feeding issues and congenital heart disease. SPS expects that instead of hospitals being a viable option for jaundiced babies, the decision regarding the management of babies with jaundice should be left with doctors and the parents," Nadig said.
