Welcome back to another edition of our commentary on recruiting and where things stand on the 2018 recruiting trail. Where have we been and where are we now? We'll delve into those topics and more in this week's edition of Bits & Baskets. Let's jump in! Workload A situation of exuberant expenditures is not the best way to consume oneself. The Buckeyes have become a player in the pass-happy West, and with that, they've also become one of the most active pass-fakers in the nation. In fact, they've been the most active pass-faker in the league in the last couple years. However, they're at least trying to build a more traditional passing game. Chris Ash spoke about his staff's philosophy in the coaches' show last week: "I think we're a culture now that says, 'Hey, we're going to throw the ball, we're going to play power football, we're going to take what the defense gives us and we're going to play physical.'" Consequently, OSU has ranked first in the Big Ten in pass attempts over the last three seasons. However, that success rate has dipped considerably. It has only been above 60% in one of those seasons, and it was only 59.8% in 2018. The coaching staff is recognizing that they need to do better on the defensive side of the football, particularly against the pass. Moreover, they've instituted a lot of assistant coaching changes. Ash has only had three coaches on the staff for two of the last three seasons. Artis Payne, who was the co-defensive coordinator, is now the sole defensive coordinator. Aside from that, Ash has only added four new assistants. The changes in the defensive staff also coincided with Ohio State's struggles on the defensive side of the ball. Greg Schiano, who was brought in as defensive coordinator in 2015, led the Buckeyes to a Big Ten-best 62.7% defensive efficiency and ranked 11th nationally against the pass. John Reid, who took over as defensive coordinator this season, has seen OSU slip into an even lower fourth ranking with its defensive play in the conference and nationally. They fell from 11th to 12th in defensive efficiency, and Ohio State has been in
