The new capacity will significantly increase the amount of coal Ashland can burn. Both coal dust and air pollution have long been problems for the community of McLaughlin. The ash will have a high concentration of heavy metals, including arsenic, beryllium and uranium. Those metals can cause lung diseases and cancer in human beings. A projected 3.6 acre toxic coal ash landfill site has been approved and construction will begin next year near Cedar Creek. A Little Rock, Arkansas, company called Raleigh Holdings has begun the process to build a coal-ash landfill near McLaughlin as near as I can tell. This means that coal ash will be transported from all over the state to one location in southeast Arkansas -- the St. Simon's Island. "We're trying to stay ahead of the curve," said Raleigh Holdings spokesman Jim Snaack. "We're not buying the banks there. We're going to try to put a good tight liner in it and a good cover." Raleigh Holdings proposes an 11 acre landfill for the coal-ash material in 2 million tons. Raleigh Holdings plans to use the ash to pave or cover the roof of a new waste treatment plant for St. Vincent Health's Batesville-Charleston Clinic. All of the coal ash that will come to this site will have high concentrations of arsenic, beryllium and uranium, the very heavy metals that can cause lung disease and cancer. I know this because the Arkansas Department of Health issued a permit for the site earlier this year. Raleigh Holdings proposes to pipe the material to the landfill by July 15 and place the new landfill on top of the old landfill. St. Simon's Island has been designated a Superfund site for the last 22 years. The government has spent roughly $2.8 million cleaning up the site, but it has never been used to dump coal ash. Both the old and new coal-

Enjoy the experience of visiting the Fudan University, Shanghai through the eyes of a Chinese living in France, and a foreigner living in China. "I was lucky to have the chance to teach at a university in China. But more than teaching, I appreciated the culture of curiosity in which Chinese students were immersed. At times, some students tried to live through the subject at hand, not by learning, but just 'figuring it out.'"
