Category:Computer-aided design softwareQ: @Valid not validating fields from request object I have a spring MVC project where I have added the annotation @Valid on a some of my spring form fields. When I submit the form to the server, validation works as expected. However, when I pass the same request object to my DAO class for validation, the annotation is ignored. My field is marked as not required and the data for the field is null (ie, the field has not been set). I have used the same request object to create the session bean for validation (whereas normally I would use the DAO class to do the work), and even if I add the parameter as @SessionAttributes("myRequestObject") it doesn't make any difference. Spring 3.1 Has anyone else faced this issue? Any ideas how I can get around it? Thanks Andrew A: The @Valid annotation is an Eureka-annotated annotation and hence does not get propagated to entities nor beans. You need to use the corresponding Eureka-injected attributes.
